

Ambitious experiment gone horribly wrong

RICHARD ROEPER

If you've seen the ads for "Gemini Man," you know it's an espionage thriller pitting 50ish hitman Will Smith against 20ish hitman Will Smith.

Gemini Man

Cast: Will Smith, Mary Elizabeth Winstead, Clive Owen, Benedict Wong

Rating: PG-13 for violence and action throughout, and brief strong language.

Thanks to the wonders of that cutting-edge, "de-aging" technology, Smith gives two of the worst performances of his career in the same film. Progress!

Sometimes when the digitally smoothed-out Will is on camera, it's pretty amazing. Other times, the effect is kind of creepy and artificial, as if we're looking at a slightly more impressive version of a Madame Tussaud's Wax Museum creation.

And at times when the two Wills were fighting in the murk and the dark, I longed for the simpler days of actors playing two characters through the use of split screen and wigs and body doubles.

For all its next-generation technology, and even with the great Ang Lee ("Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon," "Brokeback Mountain") directing, "Gemini Man" is a mind-numbingly unoriginal international spy thriller about a legendary, dark-ops, "best-of-the-best" operative who is branded a rogue agent by his double-crossing superiors and goes on the run while scores of armor-clad assassins try to take him out.

We even get the obligatory scene where the nervous government "suit" tells the antihero it's not too late to put an end to all this, but he's going to have to come in to headquarters.

Memo to the suits: That never works.

"Gemini Man" kicks off with a flashy assassination sequence

PARAMOUNT PICTURES/ASSOCIATED PRESS

that defies common sense, even in the realm of this genre. On a hillside in Belgium in the middle of a sunny day, Smith's Henry Brogan, a combat veteran turned Defense Intelligence Agency hit man-for-the-good-guys, sets up his high-powered rifle, takes aim from about a mile away and eliminates a Russian terrorist on a crowded train, narrowly avoiding hitting a little girl (who is in for years of therapy as it is).

Seems like there would be about a dozen quieter, far less risky ways to take out a terrorist, yes?

That's it for Henry. After 72 kills, he's calling it quits and he's going to retire to his beautiful country spread in Georgia, which is in Georgia because "Gemini Man" is one of the 8 million recent projects to film in Georgia. (Later scenes take us to Colombia and Budapest, and back to Georgia. More tax breaks!)

Within the first 24 hours of Henry's retirement, he learns a deep dark secret, which means Henry must be eliminated. Just like that, two of Henry's closest friends have been assassinated, he's had to take down a half-dozen hit men who swarmed his house, and he's on the run with Mary Elizabeth Winstead's Danny, who had told Henry she was a marine biology grad student but is in fact a fellow DIA operative who has been assigned to track Henry but is now a target, just like Henry.

Oh, and by this point we've been given some laughingly obvious bits of foreshadowing involving Henry's deathly allergy to bees, and his deathly fear of drowning. (There's a lot of "deathly" in all facets of Henry's world.)

Clive Owen snarls it up like a second-rate Bond villain as Henry's former mentor, Clay Verris, who runs some sort of big-budget mercenary operation and has been working for decades on a cloning program in an effort to create an army of super-soldiers. (Where have we heard that one before?)

Verris sends his "son" Junior, aka Cloned Henry, to assassinate Henry, leading to an ultra fast-frame and yet irritatingly long chase sequence in Colombia involving lots of parkour and green screen and CGI — and present-day Will Smith catching his first glimpse of de-aged Will Smith.

As programmed and trained by Verris, the Junior character is a stone-faced, nearly emotion-free dullard of a killing machine who spits out dialogue with all the emotional inflection of a Series 800 Terminator. Thing is, that doesn't make Junior much different from the original Henry, who is 51 and has never had a meaningful relationship, never allowed himself to feel anything and has never experienced much of a life outside of killing people.

Gee, it's almost as if Henry sees his younger self in his younger self. Maybe he can save the kid before the kid kills him.

In the midst of all the existential crisis blabbering and the digital wizardry and chaos delivered at 120 frames per second (or 60 fps, depending on the theater), "Gemini Man" contains arguably more "Let's pause for a drink!" moments than any movie in recent history. Henry has a can of Coke while his boss has a bottle of Stella. Henry and Danny drink Boilermakers. Let's have some Budweisers on a yacht! Hungarian coffee! A case of Hoegaarden on an isolated stretch of beach! Another Coke for the boss! And not once, but twice, main characters drink what appear to be ice-free Bloody Marys.

After slogging through this excruciatingly dumb nonsense, which is capped off by a bizarre epilogue on a college campus, I was ready for at least two of the aforementioned beverages.

ACT announces cast for 'These Shining Lives'

From Local Sources

JASPER — Actors Community Theatre's 2019-20 season launches "These Shining Lives," a dinner-theatre production which will be performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Nov.

21, 22, and 23, at the Jasper Arts Center.

The cast features Jasmine Boler as Catherine Donohue, Jade Marinin as Charlotte, Liz Book as Frances, Tyra Drew as Pearl, Marco Rocha as Tom Donohue and Craig Taylor as Mr. Reed.

Based on the true story of the workers of the Radium Dial Company in the early 1900s, "These Shining Lives" tells the fearless story of four women determined to be heard. A beautiful look at how we perceive and make use of our time, this inspiring play incites awe with its clever text and dynamic characters.

The play will be directed by Doreen Lechner who will also serve as the lighting director. The rest of the creative team includes Beth Seidl, stage manager; Chris Dixon set build lead; Andy Hoffman, sound director and lighting assistant; and Anthony Price, producer.

HBO orders 2 new seasons of Axios news series

From The Associated Press

NEW YORK — HBO has ordered two new seasons of its Sunday night news program modeled after the Axios website, which has produced newsmaking interviews with presidential son-in-law Jared Kushner and business leaders Elon Musk and Tim Cook.

The decision, announced on Tuesday, means 12 episodes each year in 2020 and 2021.

"Axios on HBO" wraps up its second season with four new episodes that begin on Oct. 20.

Axios' daily newsletter concentrates on politics, business and technology with an emphasis on brevity, which producers Matthew O'Neill and Perri Peltz use as models for the TV show.

"We are a documentary news series," Peltz said. "It allows us a glimpse into a story or a person that you wouldn't traditionally have on a straight news broadcast."

HBO turned to Axios for a news series after its deal for a daily news show produced by Vice was not renewed.

O'Neill and Peltz both have a background in documentary work with HBO. O'Neill made "Baghdad ER" for the pay cable service and Peltz made "Warning: This Drug May Kill You."

No misgivings

WILMINGTON, N.C. — Actor Judd Nelson says he doesn't share the misgivings about "The Breakfast Club" that co-star Molly Ringwald expressed in a first-person discomfort focuses on interactions that her character had with a "bad column.

In April 2018, Ringwald wrote a column for The New Yorker about watching the movie a few years earlier with her then 10-year-old daughter. Her boy" portrayed by Nelson.

In an interview with The StarNews of Wilmington, Nelson says he thinks the 1985 movie is "a product of its time" and that he doesn't "see those problems that Molly sees."

The 59-year-old Nelson is in Wilmington to star in the play "Love Letters," which will be performed Saturday at Kenan Auditorium. His co-star in the two-person drama is Sheryl Lee, who played Laura Palmer in "Twin Peaks."

New releases

Judy ★★½ (Jasper 8 Theatres) Renee Zellweger stars as Judy Garland in 1968, unhinged, financially strapped and on her way to London for a desperately needed nightclub engagement. While an impressive impersonation, Zellweger's performance never resonates as a fully fleshed-out biopic character portrayal. (Biography, PG-13, 1 hrs. 58 min.)

Currently playing

Downton Abbey ★★★ (Jasper 8 Theatres) The movie sequel to the sophisticated TV soap opera, which finds both the upstairs and the downstairs ensembles preparing for a visit from the king and queen, is an extravagant dessert after a six-course meal. Absolutely unnecessary, but still a real treat. (Drama, PG, 2 hrs. 2 min.)

It Chapter Two ★★★ (Jasper 8 Theatres) The kids of the Losers' Club reunite 27 years after the nightmare of the first film and again are haunted by the supernatural clown Pennywise. Maybe because they're adults now, the impact is relatively muted, but still, this is a solid, extremely well-crafted, great-looking and occasionally quite chilling film. (Horror, R, 2 hrs. 49 min.)

Joker ★★★½ (Jasper 8 Theatres) This chilling character study portrays events in Gotham City that resulted in the transformation of the sad loner Arthur Fleck into the classic supervillain. With maniacal Joaquin Phoenix dominating the screen with his memorably creepy turn, "Joker" will cling to you like the aftermath of an unfortunately realistic nightmare. (Comic book thriller, R, 2 hrs. 2 min.)

On DVD

Tuber ★★★ Much of the credit for this buddy comedy's success goes to the inspired pairing of action star Dave Bautista as a brooding cop and comedian Kumail Nanjiani as his mild-mannered Uber driver. It's a little bit clunky, but the stars click and the action sequences are well-filmed and sometimes brutally funny. (Action comedy, R, 1 hr. 33 min., 2019)

Hobbs & Shaw ★½ This loud and lazy and lumbering actioner is a sequel/spinoff to the "Fast and Furious" franchise, reuniting the Hulk-ish American lawman Hobbs (Dwayne Johnson) with the outlaw loner Shaw (Jason Statham) on a mission to stop a terrorist threat recycled from other movies. (Action, PG-13, 2 hrs. 15 min., 2019)
