

Marvel marks 80th anniversary with massive tribute edition

By ANTHONY McCARTNEY
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES — Marvel Comics is celebrating its 80th anniversary with a massive issue that pays tribute to its history and introduces a new object with implications for the superhero universe going forward.

The Marvel Comics 1000 issue, available Wednesday, pays homage to many of Marvel's most recognizable characters, including Iron Man, the Hulk and Spider-Man, and also spotlights some lesser known ones. Each page is devoted to a year in Marvel's history, with the first one recounting the creation of the Human Torch in Marvel Comics No. 1 in 1939.

A mix of serious and humorous stories follows, like the page devoted to 1944 in which Captain America explains why he fights, Dr. Strange's struggle to keep his magic cape smelling fresh (1951), the introduction of Groot (1960) and a page devoted to Iron Man's suit for 2008, the year Marvel's blockbuster film franchise launched.

"I definitely wanted this to be a range of experiences and not have it be an 80-page chucklefest" nor "an 80-page downer," said Tom Brevoort, the issue's editor.

Brevoort said he gave the issue's dozens of creators general guidance, but also the freedom to explore a character or story line in a single page. Many of the pages adopt what Brevoort called a "confessional" approach where a character is speaking to an interviewer. The page for 2017 features superheroes' answers to "What do you regret," or another in which Deadpool takes a little too long to answer one of the issue's recurring questions, "Why do you do what you do?"

Brevoort said: "Even if you don't like very single page, there's another page right after it that's different."

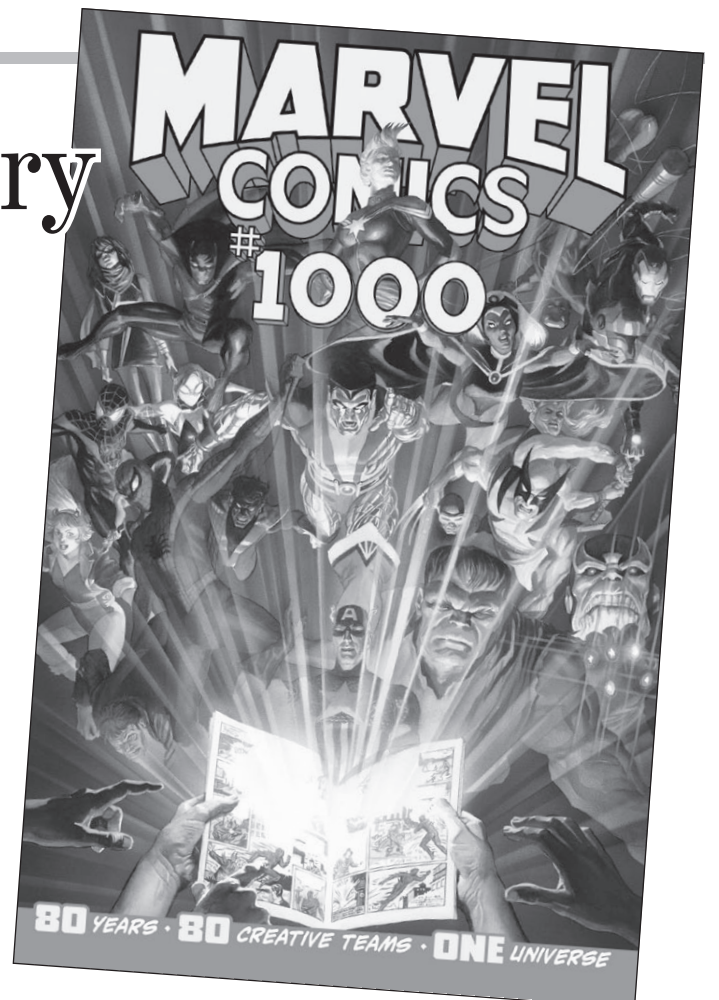

The artistic styles range from the simpler drawings of early comics to the hyper-detailed style of some contemporary titles.

Brevoort said he enlisted people he knew were fans of Marvel comics with the aim of adding a "cool flavor" to some of the pages and "show the reach that Marvel has had over 80 years that you don't really see."

Controversy emerged Tuesday after The Hollywood Reporter posted a story noting that the text on Captain America's page representing 1944 had been altered from an early version that pointed to inequalities in America and flaws in its systems. The revised text has Captain America talking about fighting injustice and how hatred, bigotry and exclusion are not patriotic values.

While many of the pages are one-offs, about a quarter of the issue is devoted to a story line that traces back to Marvel's infancy about a trio of men trying to harness the power of a black mask that has been passed down for centuries. Whoever wears the mask gains powers that give them a fighting chance against even the strongest superheroes.

The cover of Marvel Comics #1000, the publisher's 80th anniversary issue is now on sale, and features a page devoted to each year of Marvel's history through panels that explore some of its most memorable characters and also sets up a prominent story line for the future.

The Art of Racing in the Rain ★★½ (Jasper 8 Theatres) Thanks in large part to Kevin Costner's voice work as a dog taking us through the life of his race car-driver owner (Milo Ventimiglia), this adaptation of the best-selling novel comes close to winning us over. But eventually it feels as if we've been inundated with too many scenes designed to turn on the waterworks. (Drama, PG, 1 hr. 49 min.)

Good Boys ★★★ (Jasper 8 Theatres) Yes, this is a raunchy, edgy, hard-R comedy about a trio of 12-year-old boys who drop the f-bomb every other sentence and get involved in all sorts of predicaments featuring sex toys and beer and molly, but even the most hardcore jokes have a good-natured and even sweet larger context. (Comedy, R, 1 hr. 30 min.)

The Lion King ★★½ (Jasper 8 Theatres) Jon Favreau's live-action/CGI remake of the Disney animated classic "The Lion King" is a solid and at times stunningly beautiful film with breathtaking attention to detail. The insanelly talented duo of Donald Glover and Beyonce are great as Simba and Nala, Billy Eichner and Seth Rogen kill as Timon and Pumbaa, and the CGI version of Scar (Chiwetel Ejiofor) is a work of art. This "Lion King" rules. And roars. (Fantasy adventure, PG, 1 hr. 58 min.)
